

Abstract

A method of treating cancer in a patient comprising administering to the patient an amount of oxaliplatin in combination with radioactively doped particle, characterised in that the two therapies when introduced into the patient have a synergistic anticancer effect.